SANTA CLARA, Calif. – In a video message released Tuesday, April 14, Mayor Lisa M. Gillmor announced the City of Santa Clara is ready to help small businesses and nonprofits, impacted by the coronavirus pandemic, through a grant program that's launching this week.

"Many of our small businesses and nonprofits are suffering financially during this public health emergency. They are the economic drivers for our community, and we recognize the next few months will be challenging," explained Mayor Gillmor. "Through the City Council's leadership, we are moving quickly to provide small businesses and nonprofits in Santa Clara with grants that will help support both our workers and local businesses. While the $500,000 available in grant funding won't be enough to cover all financial needs, it's a start in helping our small businesses find some relief during the COVID-19 crisis."
